THE OFFICIAL NEWSLETTER FOR PARENTS OF
TEURLINGS CATHOLIC HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS

February, 2014

From Our Principal...

I communicated to you through email about the “lockdown” on Wednesday, January 15 and how well everyone handled the situation. I would like to address Teurlings Catholic procedures after school hours. Assigned “duty” teachers are in position in several locations throughout the campus. They remain on duty until 3:00 p.m. Officer Marty is relieved of his duties when the duty teachers leave at 3:00 p.m. We have a large group of students waiting to be picked up until 4:00, 4:30, 5:00, and later. If this is your case, be aware that no one is on duty should an incident happen in the late afternoon.

On January 22, thousands of Catholic Pro-Life students and teachers, including 47 Teurlings Catholic students, participated in the national Right to Life March in Washington, D.C. Marches such as this and the bi-annual Teurlings Catholic sponsored march, bring focus to the next generation of decision makers. Maybe in our lifetime we will see an end to abortion.

The spring semester brings many extra-curricular and curricular activities into full focus—basketball, baseball, softball, track and field, wrestling, tennis, bowling, golf, dancing, cheering, school play, skeet shooting, speech tournaments, quiz bowl, math tournaments, district and state literary rally, academic pep rally, passion play, prayer service, Rebel Revival, retreats, junior ring commissioning, art show, Earth Day, tryouts, elections, prom, Friday adoration, liturgies, crawfish boils, field trips, graduation, and examinations. I encourage you to support our students in these activities. The time they commit to their teams and groups and to Teurlings Catholic is a great sacrifice. These students must carefully balance a full class load, homework, social time, AND practice/game/performance time.

If your child did not have a great semester report card, encourage your student to move forward with determination. Some students only need to minimally change their study habits while others need to make take drastic steps. Encourage your child to stay focused, and help them manage their time wisely. Spring fever is contagious.

ACADEMICS

Marty Heintz - Assistant Principal

As I have noted in previous columns, the Aspire Test replaces the PLAN Test during the 2014-2015 school year. Over the next few months, I will present information on various aspects of the new test. Before I get specific with this month's topic, here are few facts about the new tests:

- The test features a combination of multiple choice and open-ended response questions.
- It can be taken on the computer or in traditional pencil and paper versions.
- The test has been developed to assess the skills of students in grades 3-10.
- What skills? While many of the skills are those that have always been tested by the ACT family of tests (PLAN, EXPLORE, ACT) the skills associated with the Common Core State Standards have been incorporated into the test.
- Skills and knowledge that was previously tested in one grade may now be tested in a lower grade.
- Beginning in third grade, the test provides a score that attempts to predict a student's possible success in college.
- The scoring system will correlate from grade 3 to grade 10 and then to the ACT, which will be revised in two years.
- Do we have to give the Aspire? Technically, no. Do you want your student to succeed on the ACT and get TOPS? Then, yes. There are other standardized tests out there, but our students need to prepare for the ACT, since EVERY university, community college, trade school, and institution of higher learning in Louisiana, as well as half the country, requires scores on the test for admissions and placement. The other college admissions test, the PSAT/SAT, required primarily at universities along the East and West coasts, is also being revised to meet the new standards.

This month: "Open-ended response"

When my mother was in school in the 30's and 40's it was called a "theme". When I was in school it was a "composition". That evolved to an "essay" in the 80's and 90's, then to a "paper" for our current students.

The new term is "open-ended question" – which may not actually be accurate since most teachers expect a pretty concrete and constructed answer with opinion based on fact. Whatever you call it, to students it means getting out the paper and pen or today the computer and attempting to put into words what the student believes the teacher wants to hear.

For hundreds of years, the written response was the property of the English/language arts teacher. Thanks to curriculum change, students today find themselves staring at those "open-ended questions" in all subject areas, even in math class. The education world has come to the conclusion that if a student can tell you in words how to solve a math problem, for instance, the student really does know how to solve it. If the student can tell you in paragraph form why the experiment in science was a success, then the student understands the process. If the student can tell you what the author was trying to convey in his/her poem, the student truly understands the work of literature. And, if the student can tell you what the results of the war were rather than memorize the dates of battles, then the student can help prevent history from repeating.

The new Aspire Test features multiple choice and open-ended responses in math, reading, and science and includes a separate "Writing Test." Only the English portion of the test remains all multiple choice. Here are some examples of the open-ended portion of the new tests:

- Science: students are presented with accounts of experiments, charts, graphs, and drawings and are asked to draw verbal conclusions from the material presented. Instead of simply answer the question "what happened" as a result of the experiment, the student may be asked to explain why the results presented are incorrect, why the results are what they are, or how the results could be changed by additional variables.
- Math: students will be asked to write out in essay form how a math problem is solved or, again, explain why a solution presented is wrong. Correct terminology is a must, so the student has to know the math vocabulary. Now you know why our Algebra I and Geometry teachers are stressing vocabulary this year on their regular testing.

- Reading: students are given a selection to read, fiction or nonfiction, then may be asked to explain the author's intent or how the historical period of either the piece or the author's own life may have altered the perspective. Of course, traditional questions about purpose, vocabulary, characters, main idea, etc. are still there in the multiple choice section. Again, this is nothing new for our students, who regularly write about the literary works read in English classes. On the new test, most of the reading selections are social sciences based, just as in the current PLAN and ACT Tests.

Writing: we adopted the "timed writing approach" here at TCHS in 2004 with our first computer grant so our students are very familiar with the format on the new Aspire Test. Students are given a writing prompt, usually persuasive in nature. Correct form, vocabulary, grammar, and legible handwriting are important, as is backing up the student's opinion with fact. Here is an example of a writing prompt similar to those on the Aspire Test, as presented by ACT:

*It is wise to weigh our options carefully before making decisions, but waiting too long to decide can lead to missed opportunities. Write an essay in which you explain both the value and the challenge of carefully considering our options before deciding. Be sure to support your analysis with reasons and examples. ****

How are open-ended responses scored? First, there is no one right answer. What is important is that the student use correct standard and legible English and present ideas and opinions grounded in fact. There are defined rubrics, similar to those used by our English teachers. Open-ended responses are read by several experts who score the response using the rubric guidelines. A consensus is reached by averaging the various readers' scores.

Want to know more about the test, as well as see examples of questions from the English, math, reading, and science tests? You can visit the ACT website at www.discoveractaspire.org
